

THE 7 DIMENSIONS OF SUCCESS

EVERY VETERINARY PRO SHOULD KNOW

ROLE

For many people, success represents a role, title or a job. But beware: a role itself is not likely to bring you long-term satisfaction. It feels great to achieve, yet six months later it can start all over again as we set our sights on the next goal.

MONEY

How much money do you want to make? Let's not deny that money is a metric that many of us use for success. A version of success that doesn't include financial independence or security isn't realistic.

TIME

Consider how you spend time and how much freedom you have with it. It's a key ingredient of happiness too, that you're spending time in ways that make you feel good about what you did with the time you spent.

RELATIONSHIPS

What kind of relationships do you want with your veterinary team members? How do you communicate with each other? How much trust is there? Our success demands we explore these questions

IMPACT

What do you want to be different because you showed up? Ask yourself, what are the things that I want to make better or have influence over or on? As a leader, you can have a great impact on progress.

LEGACY

As you make your leadership journey, different things are going to matter more in different places. What's not just going to be different today, but for the rest of these team members' lives because you were there?

THOUGHTS

Asking the questions, what am I not worried about, or what do I feel good about is important. The major source of unhappiness involves worrying about what we can't do or aren't good enough at or should have done differently.
